

RECYCLABLE WASTE MANAGEMENT

Metal Recycling

As part of the company's holistic waste management policy, Interwaste has recently invested in the expertise, plant and equipment in order to offer an efficient metals recycling service to its existing and potential clients.

To maximise value from metals recycling it is necessary to categorise, separate and process the materials to the specification of the end user.

This can be offered either as an on-site service or alternatively the activities relating to the recycling process may be done off-site. This is dependant on the volumes concerned and on specific client requirements.

In many cases it is possible, as a result of increased efficiencies, to offset the costs of recovery management and increase revenues generated from the recycling process. This can often lead to a zero-cost waste management scenario or even an income positive holistic service.

Electronic Waste Management

An ever increasing reliance on technology and continuous innovation in the technology sector has resulted in an ever growing volume of redundant electronic goods finding its way onto landfill sites.

These materials are in most cases considered a valuable resource in terms of potential material recovery. However, in some cases hazardous materials are encountered during processing. Interwaste is involved in the management of waste electronic goods in order to extract the maximum value of components which can be reutilised, while at the same time taking care to ensure that all hazardous materials are separated and treated to accepted standards prior to final disposal.
